

Connecting Home and School

What happens when communication breaks down?

Not all issues are easy to solve

Sometimes parents and teachers find it hard to reach agreement.

If you feel you have reached a stalemate, consider the following:

- Approach conversation from problem solving perspective with common goal of helping child
- Make appointment to speak with building administrator to share concerns and provide documentation
- Is there a specialist (counselor, math/reading consultant, etc.) who can provide input?
- Take notes and follow up with respectful emails in conversations and problem solving with teacher/specialists
- If possible/appropriate, request a meeting with parents, teacher and administrator to create an effective plan acceptable to everyone
